Note 1: The pre-professional program is for students with a BA or BS degree in an area other than speech-language pathology and who have not taken the prerequisite courses for entrance into the graduate courses. Note 2: Many graduate programs in speech-language pathology (ISU included) require an undergraduate course in statistics or experimental design is required if not taken as an undergraduate. Note 3: Many graduate programs in Speech-Language Pathology require a background in sign language. ISU does not currently offer this class on-line. Prospective graduate students are encouraged to find a community or university based sign language course to supplement their education. All students that are admitted to the graduate program in speech language pathology are guaranteed a seat in the graduate speech-language program as long as they complete all courses successfully. “Special graduate students” must complete all classes successfully to be eligible for application for competitive admission in the following year’s graduate class.
