Other Business: UCC representatives’ role and proposal review

Discussion! What can we do to improve the process for developing proposals to eliminate confusion on how to fill out forms, expectations of involved parties, clarify roles of the UCC reps, and eliminate extra work for the Registrar’s Office and the administrative assistant on the back end in fixing submitted proposals.

- It’s hard for inexperienced POs and UCC reps to know what to do when creating a new program that isn’t similar to usual programs so the existing reference documents aren’t as helpful. In those cases, please reach out early to the Registrar’s Office or Catherine to help guide you through the steps.
- UCC reps and POs gain experience as they work through developing proposals, and there are several references to help guide.
- Academic Affairs has a year-long training program for new department chairs. Consider having the UCC Chair or other experienced UCC rep attend a couple of meetings to help train the department chairs.
- Consider creating a video or something that shows how all the proposal pieces fit together, how CourseLeaf works, and how everything becomes the final catalog.
- Consider better coordination between UCC and Graduate School’s proposal process. UCC’s proposals are more thorough and show how the curriculum will appear in the catalog.
- Any way of having a Registrar’s Office representative work with the Graduate School to facilitate the logistical pieces of the catalog production process?
- There is no entity similar to UCC in Graduate School that focuses on curriculum, courses, and the catalog. Graduate Council members take care of all graduate level business; the catalog proposals are only a small part of what they work on, so no one really has a good handle on proposal forms or the process. Therefore, it is hard for POs to get help in developing their graduate proposals.
